What affected the Fund’s performance?

- U.S. stocks generally rose despite tariff-related drawdowns, as inflation eased and interest rates plateaued, led by gains in large-cap and growth-oriented names.
- Stock selection in information technology, along with overweight exposure to energy, bolstered the Fund’s relative performance.
- Secondary positive contributors included stock selection and overweight exposure to communication services, and underweight exposure to real estate.
- Stock selection within the Industrials sector, as well as both selection and overweight exposure in financials, were the largest detractors from relative performance.
- Disappointing stock selection within the consumer staples sector also detracted.
